

Head of International Office & International Study Programs

Being a "pioneering university," Zeppelin University (ZU) defines itself as an individualized, international and interdisciplinary educator of well-rounded decision makers and creative innovators in the fields of business, culture and politics, and as a multi-disciplinary research institution exploring issues relevant to society. ZU fully embraces international education. Solid global partnerships with more than 65 universities constitute an integral component of the university's mission.

Head of International Office & International Study Programs (m/f)

The ZU International Office (IO) supports the establishment and maintenance of these and other global activities. It provides advice and support to incoming and outgoing students and generally coordinates international educational exchanges.

The successful candidate will possess considerable experience in the management of international education. A broad understanding of the issues impacting global education, ranging from the acquisition of new partner institutions and their stewardship to the recruitment of global students, is imperative.

The position of Head of International Office & International Study Programs requires fundamental management skills in duties common to international offices. In close cooperation with the university's International Faculty Council the candidate will develop and expand the internationalization of our study programs in both dual and joint degree programs for bachelor and master students.

Because the Head of International Office & International Study Programs will occupy a post that represents the university both at home and abroad, applicants must possess very strong writing, speaking and networking skills in English and German.

We are looking forward to your application with all documents and credentials, a one pager with your mission of "How to internationalize a small university for great ideas".
